Re: Call for Policy Revisions for Spring 2021

Dear President Williams and Members of the Board:

As organizations with a shared goal of ensuring that higher education students are protected from predatory schools and have access to high quality education that does not leave them with worthless degrees and unaffordable debt, whether they enroll in brick-and-mortar programs or in online education, we appreciate the call for proposals to modify NC-SARA policy. NC-SARA's position affords it important opportunities to ensure policies are in place to protect veterans, servicemembers, and low-income students from being cheated and deceived by predatory colleges.

For ease of reference, we attach here the proposals submitted to NC-SARA on April 28, 2020 and September 11, 2020, as well as recommendations shared in 2018 by The Institute for College Access & Success. With the exception of our April 2020 recommendation related to professional licensure, which was reflected in the board's May meeting actions, we believe these recommendations remain relevant and worthy of consideration. We would welcome the opportunity to discuss them further at your convenience.

We appreciate receiving a response to our September 11 comments from President and CEO Lori Williams, dated October 27, 2020, and the invitation to each organization to learn more about efforts currently underway. We look forward to such conversations. In the meantime, we wish to clarify two points made in the letter with respect to our proposals.

First, NC-SARA sought to clarify a preexisting requirement that participating schools "provide a reasonable alternative for delivering the instruction or reasonable financial compensation for the education the student did not receive" in the case of program discontinuation, a requirement that is both important and difficult to operationalize given the broad language used. Our suggestions aimed to make the requirement a clearer and more meaningful standard. Given that NC-SARA's goal was to reiterate an existing requirement, we do not understand how clarifying the requirement "would be inappropriate for NC-SARA" to do or how it would "overstep [NC-SARA's] purview." Further, to the extent that the use of more precise language would create a stronger standard than currently in place at participating institutions, we do not believe these steps to be inappropriate for an entity that aims to promote high-quality educational opportunities. Given that the preeminent function of states' higher education oversight role is consumer protection, we assert that higher standards are in fact necessary for a useful and effective reciprocity agreement that asks states to delegate responsibility and authority.

Second, as you are aware, we have recommended that NC-SARA prohibit participating institutions from including mandatory arbitration clauses in enrollment agreements, given its unique position as a private entity. In response to this recommendation, the letter said that "the issue of when and how mandatory arbitration clauses are employed" is up to states to decide. This is not the case, as the Federal Arbitration Act generally disallows states from placing such restrictions. However, as an independent organization, NC-SARA could legally prohibit mandatory arbitration clauses for member institutions without violating the Federal Arbitration Act. Because NC-SARA prohibits states from enforcing state higher education laws aimed at protecting students, and also precludes students' states from investigating and acting on the complaints of their residents or taking action against a school for violating NC-SARA policies, a prohibition on mandatory arbitration clauses would better protect students from abusive and low-quality predatory schools seeking to use NC-SARA as a shield from accountability.

We sincerely appreciate the opportunity to offer these comments and clarifications. Again, we welcome opportunities to discuss these recommendations at your convenience.

Re: Proposed NC-SARA Manual Modification Comments

Dear President Williams and Members of the Board:

Our organizations have a shared goal of ensuring that higher education students are protected from predatory schools and have access to high quality education that does not leave them with unmanageable debt, no matter whether they enroll in brick-and-mortar programs or in online education. As colleges across the country transition to remote learning, the role of the National Council for State Authorization Reciprocity Agreements (NC-SARA) is of increasing importance.

Reciprocity agreements can be important tools in streamlining oversight and promoting quality educational opportunity, but only so far as the specific terms of the agreement are sufficiently robust. In the case of NC-SARA, its terms represent a net increase in the regulation of distance education in some states, but they also undermine safeguards and consumer protections in others. Some of our organizations have previously offered recommendations for how NC-SARA could be strengthened to facilitate the provision of quality online educational opportunities across state lines while supporting robust oversight structures to ensure consumer protection.

In recent months, several of the signatories to this letter have had encouraging conversations with President and CEO Lori Williams about short- and long-term opportunities to address our concerns about NC-SARA's structure and terms. Our recommendations have taken on new urgency in recent weeks as the coronavirus pandemic appears likely to encourage broader use of online education next year and beyond. In this letter, we focus on the proposed changes to be discussed by the Board during its May 2020 meeting, as well as offer additional suggestions for how NC-SARA could be responsive to the higher education community's needs during this time of crisis. We welcome opportunities to discuss our broader recommendations for NC-SARA, not fully encapsulated in this letter, with any interested Board member.

We appreciate that NC-SARA shared details on proposed changes to its manual and extended an invitation to submit comments on those proposals in advance of the May Board meeting at which they will be discussed.<sup>1</sup> However, despite these commendable shifts towards greater transparency in decision-making and governance, we are disappointed by NC-SARA's decision to disallow members of the public from viewing the discussion. At a time when oversight of online education and NC-SARA's role are of particular importance, we urge the Board to

Recommendations on NC-SARA Proposed Manual Changes

I. Professional Licensure

NC-SARA facilitates the approval and operation of out-of-state online education. However, not all educational opportunities are equally meaningful when provided across state lines. Programs designed to lead to specific careers may prepare students for licensure or certification in one state but not others, rendering the education – and the costs associated with it – of questionable value for residents of the states where certification prerequisites have not been met.

Relative to federal standards, NC-SARA has taken a middle-ground approach to addressing this challenge to-date. NC-SARA schools are currently required to determine whether programs meet requirements in each state from which students enroll and share that information with students and prospective students.<sup>2</sup> If unable to determine whether programs meet requirements after “making all reasonable efforts” to do so, the school may instead provide additional contact information for professional licensing boards to the student for their own inquiries. Notably, the NC-SARA standard does not prohibit schools from enrolling students from states in which licensure or certification prerequisites have not been met, as did the now-rescinded 2014 gainful employment rule.<sup>3</sup>

However, new federal state authorization rules require only that colleges disclose whether or not they know if programs meet state requirements, with no obligation on the part of the school to seek out the information.<sup>4</sup> Rather than maintaining its existing requirement, or proposing to strengthen its existing requirement to mirror the prior gainful employment rule standard, NC-SARA is proposing to weaken its requirement to match the new federal standard (Section 5.2).

The justification provided in the Board materials for making this change – that retaining the requirement “will only cause confusion for [] participating institutions” by requiring them to comply with “similar, yet slightly different requirements” – does not withstand scrutiny.<sup>5</sup> There is no conflict between NC-SARA and federal state authorization requirements, and any school complying with NC-SARA’s longstanding requirement will have more than met the new federal standard. As a result, there should be no confusion, nor additional burden placed on NC-SARA schools if the existing standard is left in place. Lowering the NC-SARA standard to match the newly weakened federal standards will only place students at heightened risk of spending time and money on education that will not pay off.

(Hereafter referred to as “NC-SARA May 2020 Board Meeting Materials.”)

Importantly, while the Board meeting materials seem to suggest that this requirement would newly apply to schools that do not receive federal financial aid, the existing, stronger standard already applies to all NC-SARA schools, regardless of whether they are Title-IV eligible.<sup>6</sup> Ultimately, this proposed change amounts to a weakening of standards for all NC-SARA schools, and a higher standard for none of them.

We understand that there are concerns about the extent to which NC-SARA institutions are complying with the current NC-SARA standard, as well as Portal Entities' capacity to monitor school compliance. These are questions of critical import, and about which we make recommendations below. However, they do not justify removing this critical student protection.

NC-SARA is well positioned to raise the bar for online education, in terms of both quality and consumer protection, but this cannot happen if it believes that raising the bar – by definition, setting “different requirements” – is something to avoid, or if it handles institutional non-compliance by rescinding requirements that colleges choose not to comply with.

We therefore recommend that the Board reject this proposed change to weaken the professional licensure requirement that is currently in the NC-SARA manual, and instead consider strengthening it to align with the prior gainful employment rule standard.

II. Branch Campuses and Student Complaints

The meeting materials indicate that the Board will consider three different changes to the way branch campuses are overseen.<sup>7</sup> The proposal would:

- Allow students to file complaints in either the institution's Home State or the state in which the branch campus is located (Section 4.4(d));
- Specify that Home States are responsible for resolving complaints against programs operated by branch campuses located in Host States (Section 2.5(i)(7)); and
- Limit the authority of Host States to regulate online programs operated by branch campuses (Section 2.5(o)).

There is little in these proposals that would make filing complaints easier or more effective for students, and much that would put students at risk and limit state authority to act even when an institution has physical presence within the state.

Although the proposal to allow students enrolled in online programs operated by branch campuses to file complaints either in the Home State or the Host State is framed as giving the student a choice, neither of these options necessarily represents a better process for the student. If a student enrolls in a program operated by a branch campus in Michigan, from a college headquartered in Arizona, but the student himself lives in Iowa, offering him the opportunity to file a complaint in Michigan offers little or no benefit.

Further, although the proposed changes to Section 4.4 would permit students to file a complaint in the Host State, the changes in Section 2.5(i)(7) make it clear that it is the Home State which is ultimately responsible for handling the complaints, no matter where they are filed. Requiring Host State Portal Entities to accept student complaints against branch campuses, while simultaneously removing their authority to act on the complaint, will reduce the likelihood of students' complaints being effectively resolved. These changes are further complicated by the proposed changes to Section 2.5(o) which would “clarify that the Host State will not regulate distance activity outside the state.”

With regard to Host State regulation, the materials say that the modification to section 2.5(o) “will provide clarity about the ability of a Host State to regulate online and distance education activity within its state, when physical presence is established. It will also clarify that the host state will not regulate distance activity outside the state.”<sup>8</sup> However, if physical presence requirements are met, the Host State must retain authority to regulate the branch campus’s activity, even if the program has enrolled students from other states. Regulating a branch campus’s activity includes investigating and resolving student complaints about that branch. To remove that authority, as these proposed changes would do, would undermine the authority of the Host State to regulate colleges that operate within their borders and as such undermines NC-SARA’s core notion of shared oversight.

NC-SARA staff has provided assurances that the Portal Entities are in communication with each other regularly, and that they are able to express concerns and collaborate on responses in that way,<sup>9</sup> but in the interests of consumer protection and transparency those communication and collaboration processes should be formalized. Host States should be notified anytime a complaint is filed against a program with physical presence in their state, as should students’ states, and they should be part of the process to resolve complaints about programs based within their borders.

We therefore recommend that the Board reject the proposed changes, and instead strengthen the authority of Host States to receive and respond to complaints against programs operated by branch campuses.

III. Provisional Status

According to the materials, schools on provisional status are “...subject to such additional oversight measures as the Home State considers necessary for purposes of ensuring SARA requirements are met regarding program quality, financial stability and consumer protection, including limits on its distance learning enrollments if deemed necessary and appropriate by the Home State.”<sup>10</sup> However, the materials also acknowledge that at least one state has no procedures in place that apply to institutions on provisional status, meaning that it is not consistently true that schools on provisional status are subject to additional oversight.<sup>11</sup>

The suggested addition to manual Section 2.5(q) would require states to have a process for considering institutions’ applications for provisional status, on the occasions when specified circumstances arise that may be cause for concern. In addition, the proposed change to Section 2.5(c) would clarify that such a process must include required review of institutions with Financial Responsibility Composite Scores (FRCS) that fall below 1.5.<sup>12</sup>

We agree with these recommendations and urge NC-SARA to go further.

First, states should have mandatory review processes for all of the circumstances detailed in Section 3.2(a) of the NC-SARA manual, not only for FRCS.<sup>13</sup> Second, Section 3.2(a)(7) allows Portal Entities to consider provisional status for institutions that are not complying with NC-SARA’s data reporting requirements, but, because lack of compliance with regulations is an important way regulators can identify problems at an institution, any breach of NC-SARA policies should be sufficient to trigger a provisional status review.

Third, Portal Entities should have more discretion to determine whether an institution remains on provisional status, and the authority to revoke an institution’s membership if they determine there is a significant risk to students not specifically listed in the NC-SARA manual. To illustrate the problem with current NC-SARA policy, consider an institution placed on provisional status due to a government investigation in 2019 and ultimately found guilty. Despite the school's known wrongdoing, and irrespective of how egregious the wrongdoing was, the Portal Entity would currently have no authority to keep that institution on provisional status unless another investigation was opened in 2020. The same would be true if the institution had settled the claim, agreeing to provide financial relief to students, but making no admission of fault; the NC-SARA Portal Entity would have no choice but to reapprove the institution's NC-SARA membership in full because the institution would no longer be the subject of a current investigation. This is just one example that highlights the importance of allowing Portal Entities to use their judgment and discretion when evaluating institutions for NC-SARA membership. No state should be forced to approve institutions which they do not believe warrant membership in NC-SARA.

Finally, we urge the Board to work with states to articulate processes for what evaluation of institutions should entail whenever one of the red flags detailed in this section is identified. The concern is not simply about the need for a process, but rather the need for a substantive, meaningful process. It is thus critical that NC-SARA clarify that states must have a process for assessing provisional status, but also ensure that this process provides meaningful oversight and attention to problematic schools. NC-SARA should work with states to determine a uniform set of monitoring requirements and restrictions that institutions on provisional status should be subject to, in order to provide states with the confidence that problematic schools outside their borders are being monitored and that sufficient safeguards are in place. Further, NC-SARA must take responsibility for monitoring states' compliance with this process, along with other membership requirements.

Other Urgent Recommendations for NC-SARA Given COVID-19 Crisis

I. Address Deficiencies in State Portal Entity Capacity

NC-SARA's theory of action rests on member states fulfilling all of the agreement's requirements and performing sufficient state oversight so that other states can trust in the quality of each others' institutions. Yet NC-SARA has acknowledged that state Portal Entity capacity varies widely, with some states so severely understaffed and underresourced that they are unable to perform the monitoring and oversight functions required of them under NC-SARA. Troublingly, these deficiencies in Portal Entity capacity are being used to justify some of the proposals to weaken standards.

In instances where state Portal Entity shortcomings are challenging states' compliance with NC-SARA requirements, the answer cannot be to reduce the requirements. Solving a problem of regulatory noncompliance with less regulation will only hasten a regulatory race to the bottom. Instead, NC-SARA should institute capacity standards for Portal Entities as a requirement for state membership in the agreement, to ensure that only states able to perform the functions delegated to them by other member states are able to participate in NC-SARA.

II. Raise Standards for Stronger Consumer Protection

In addition to concerns about state capacity, the extent to which states can feel comfortable delegating oversight to other states is also a function of the standards to which regulated entities will be held. Many states share concerns about whether the NC-SARA standards are sufficiently high. In 2018, the Attorneys General of 15 states plus the District of Columbia expressed concern that NC-SARA's terms restricted students' access "to information about programs and to refunds and other state-level protections," and states' "ability to bring enforcement actions against predatory for-profit schools offering online programs in their states."<sup>14</sup>

The lack of sufficiently high consumer protection standards is one reason why California has declined to join NC-SARA, and the differences are clear. NC-SARA provides Portal Entities with next to no discretion in determining which schools may join, and – with the very limited and inconsistent exception discussed above with respect to provisional status – member schools can enroll students nationally, without limit and without concern for other states’ views.<sup>15</sup> In contrast, California law allows the state to prohibit schools, irrespective of where they are located, from enrolling Californians if the school is believed to be a risk.<sup>16</sup> In another example, California’s fund requires that out-of-state for-profit colleges pay into its Student Tuition Recovery Fund for the Californians they enroll,<sup>17</sup> but NC-SARA includes no comparable protection. As a result, Californians have greater access to financial relief if their college or even their program closes than do students from other states.<sup>18</sup> Were the state to join NC-SARA, Californians would lose these protections, as the state’s more protective higher education rules would be superseded by NC-SARA’s comparatively lax ones.

If unwilling to allow states to fully enforce their laws specifically targeted at the deceptive practices of higher education institutions against out-of-state schools, we urge the Board to raise consumer protection standards, in ways and to levels that minimize concerns about delegating oversight of questionable institutions and putting students at risk. Whereas NC-SARA engages frequently with state Portal Entities, including through the state compacts which are designated to represent them, it is imperative that these discussions include substantial engagement of state attorneys general and other consumer protection stakeholders who bring expertise regarding, and who focus on preventing and mitigating, student abuses and harms. While state Portal Entities often have the most direct contact with the institutions being regulated, state attorneys general representatives and other consumer protection stakeholders have direct contact with the students whose education and protection is in question.

The establishment of different, higher standards for NC-SARA membership than those required under other regulatory schemes would set NC-SARA schools apart and help facilitate student access to the highest quality and value in online education. The arguments in the Board meeting materials against creating standards that differ from federal requirements fundamentally misunderstand the function state overseers play in higher education oversight; we assert that higher standards are in fact necessary for a useful and effective reciprocity agreement among states, given that the preeminent function of states’ oversight role is consumer protection. Rather than expressing “concerns” about state legislative proposals aimed at preventing abusive behavior, as NC-SARA recently did in response to Maryland lawmakers’ proposal to close the well-known “90/10” loophole in federal law, NC-SARA should embrace such proposals as opportunities to evaluate whether there is wisdom in NC-SARA raising its own standards, in the name of promoting high-quality educational opportunities.<sup>19</sup> If signed, the law, which was passed unanimously by the Maryland legislature,<sup>20</sup> cannot and will not be enforced against NC-SARA member institutions due to NC-SARA policy.<sup>21</sup>

III. Attorney General, Consumer Advocate, and Student Membership on Board of Directors

A serious defect of NC-SARA's governance is that – while framed as a joint agreement of states – a small number of seats on the Board are filled with state representatives. In fact, there are more seats filled by college and university representatives than by states, giving the regulated entities themselves a larger role than states in approving new regulations.<sup>22</sup>

At a minimum, we recommend the immediate creation of four additional Board positions, two for state attorneys general, one for a consumer advocate, and one for a student. This inclusion will bring fresh perspectives to the Board in this time of crisis, and will ensure that law enforcement and student-focused voices will be part of the discussion.

IV. Increase Complaint Transparency

When students enroll in a distance education program, it is important that there is a complaint procedure in place to ensure that students' concerns are reviewed and addressed under the law. Complaints serve a dual purpose: They allow students to address concerns and seek resolution to issues relating to their education, and they also allow states to identify patterns of predatory or misleading practices at institutions. The existing complaint system utilized by NC-SARA unfortunately suffers from a lack of transparency, and limits authority to resolve complaints to the institution and the Home State where the institution is located.<sup>23</sup>

Currently, NC-SARA policies require students to exhaust complaint procedures at their institution before they are permitted to raise their complaint to the state level,<sup>24</sup> a process requirement that undoubtedly has a dampening effect on complaint submission given administrative burden as well as concerns about school retaliation.<sup>25</sup> Once they have done so, students are only permitted to file a complaint in the state where the institution is located, rather than the state where they live. Although the NC-SARA complaint process encourages the Home State to notify the Portal Entity of the student's state when they receive a complaint,<sup>26</sup> there is no expectation that the student's state will have a role in resolving the complaint nor transparency to provide other states with information about the complaint. That means that states may not know if their residents are frequently filing complaints about a particular school, or if that a particular school has a pattern of abuse affecting residents of several states. The NC-SARA manual makes clear that member states all remain able to enforce general-purpose laws (though not higher-education specific laws) against member schools, regardless of where the institution is located.<sup>27</sup> Yet identifying patterns of problematic or abusive behavior across state lines - behavior which may violate general consumer laws - is far more challenging when the structures designed to identify abusive behavior do not facilitate the communication of relevant information.

We urge the Board to take steps to develop a complaint process that works well for students, requires collaboration among states, and assists in identifying problematic patterns of institutional behavior. Students must be free to file complaints in their own state where it is most convenient to them, states must share complaint information freely and transparently, and complaint data must be centrally collected and tracked at every level.

V. Prohibit Mandatory Arbitration Clauses

The combination of loosened federal regulation and an economic downturn triggered a boom in for-profit college enrollment after the Great Recession.<sup>28</sup> The current economic crisis is likely to lead to another enrollment boom, and with the for-profit college sector now predominantly online and enrolling students from states outside of the institution's state,<sup>29</sup> the risks to students are now greater.

One step NC-SARA is uniquely positioned to take is to prohibit mandatory arbitration clauses in member school enrollment agreements. Mandatory arbitration clauses were widely and long used by for-profit schools, including some of the largest institutions within NC-SARA, to limit students' recourse if they have been harmed by their school.<sup>30</sup> Such agreements have not typically been included in enrollment agreements of public and nonprofit colleges, which compose the vast majority of NC-SARA membership, and are currently prohibited by federal regulation until June 30, 2020. However, due to the weakening of these federal rules in 2019, institutions will soon be able to employ them once again.<sup>31</sup> As an independent organization rather than a state compact, NC-SARA could legally prohibit mandatory arbitration clauses outright for member institutions without violating the Federal Arbitration Act; however, the NC-SARA manual does not currently prohibit mandatory arbitration agreements.<sup>32</sup>

NC-SARA prohibits states from enforcing state higher education laws aimed at protecting students. It also precludes students' states from investigating and acting on the complaints of their residents or taking action against a school for violating NC-SARA policies. NC-SARA should take steps to ensure that students are able to protect themselves and seek restitution when they are harmed, including by seeking redress in a court of law. By prohibiting arbitration clauses, abusive and low quality for-profit schools will be less able to use NC-SARA as a shield to accountability.

We urge the Board to prohibit institutions operating within NC-SARA from including mandatory arbitration agreements in their enrollment agreements.

Response to Financial Responsibility Composite Score Concerns

discussed at the upcoming Board Meeting.<sup>33</sup> We concur with Dr. Williams that the FRCS – although an imperfect indicator – is the only nationally-recognized tool available to monitor institutions’ financial stability.<sup>34</sup>

Further, in light of the fact that FRCS will not reflect the current crisis for nearly three years given the lag in reporting of financial statements, waiving the requirement at this time would serve to benefit primarily those institutions which are already suffering financial difficulties as opposed to those which were financially stable prior to the pandemic.

We urge the Board to maintain or strengthen NC-SARA’s FRCS requirement in response to the current crisis, rather than weaken it in any way. If anything, as recent events have heightened the risk of financial collapse for many institutions, NC-SARA should be identifying more robust and timely indicators that a school is financially unstable and thus vulnerable to closure, over-aggressive enrollment efforts, and cost-cutting measures that undermine educational integrity. Many of our organizations would also be eager to participate in any efforts to consider improved measures of financial viability moving forward, as suggested by Dr. Williams.<sup>35</sup>

Dear President Williams and Members of the Board:

Our organizations have a shared goal of ensuring that higher education students are protected from predatory schools and have access to high quality education that does not leave them with unaffordable debt, no matter whether they enroll in brick-and-mortar programs or in online education. We appreciate the consideration the Board gave to our previous comments, and hope to be a resource to the National Council for State Authorization Reciprocity Agreements (NC-SARA) leadership in this time of great uncertainty and unprecedented online enrollment.

We also appreciate the opportunity to comment on the proposed modifications to be discussed at the October Board meeting, and note that in the future, a longer comment period will help NC-SARA achieve its goal of greater engagement from key stakeholders. In addition to commenting on several of NC-SARA's proposed changes, we also reiterate some recommendations shared previously. We also reiterate our offer to discuss these recommendations further with NC-SARA staff or board members at their convenience, and our request that the Board meeting discussion allow for public participation.

Recommendations on NC-SARA Proposed Manual Changes

I. Policy Change Modification A – Provisional Status

Institutional applications to participate in NC-SARA require that school leaders agree to a list of requirements that institutions “must meet.” The proposed change to Section 3.2 would allow state portal entities to consider placing an institution on provisional status if the institution has failed to comply with the requirements to which it previously agreed. This change is framed as providing states “greater leverage to put institutions on provisional status,” though it is unclear from the document how states currently handle schools found to be non-compliant with application requirements and therefore whether this change would actually serve to strengthen or weaken existing NC-SARA requirements. Does a portal entity normally rescind an institution's NC-SARA approval once it discovers non-compliance? If so, would this change weaken standards, such that portal entities can allow institutions to continue on provisional status even when there are serious non-compliance issues that put students at risk? Or alternatively, do portal entities believe they have no authority under current NC-SARA rules to address institutional non-compliance, such that the proposed change would strengthen states' enforcement powers by newly granting them such authority?

While we fully agree that portal entities should be monitoring institutional compliance with NC-SARA requirements, consequences for not adhering to them must not be subject to state discretion. Institutions that fail to meet NC-SARA requirements are not eligible for NC-SARA membership, whether full or provisional in status. Given the lack of clarity on these issues currently, we agree that some policy modification may be warranted. However, any clarification should underscore the importance and universality of these eligibility requirements. Leaving the question of consequence up to the discretion of the state would allow for variable enforcement, potentially incentivizing predatory institutions to forum-shop for states with lax oversight, and would ultimately undermine the meaning and utility of the requirements themselves.

Simply adding a summary sentence as recommended in the meeting materials would likely cause confusion, and encourage variable enforcement at the state level. Further, as our previous comments pointed out, because lack of compliance with regulations is an important way regulators can identify problems at an institution, any breach of NC-SARA policies should be sufficient to trigger a provisional status review at a minimum. We recommend that NC-SARA staff and the Board work with states to articulate which policy violations trigger a provisional status review, and which result in an immediate removal from NC-SARA participation. Further, we believe that this list should not only include the application requirements referenced in the proposed modification, but also any additional red flags that may indicate that a school poses a risk to students, including an investigation by law enforcement in other states. Specifically listing out the policy violations and red flags that trigger an institution's review or removal will provide more clarity to all stakeholders and encourage a consistent pattern of enforcement across all states.

It is critical that NC-SARA ensure that states are performing meaningful oversight of the institutions within their borders and that the provisional status review process yields meaningful results. Yet as the May 2020 NC-SARA Board meeting materials verified, portal entities do not consistently subject schools on provisional status to additional oversight. Therefore, NC-SARA should additionally work with states to determine a uniform set of monitoring requirements as well as a common set of restrictions that institutions on provisional status will be subject to. This will provide states with the confidence that problematic schools outside their borders are being monitored and that sufficient safeguards are in place. NC-SARA must also take responsibility for monitoring states' compliance with this process, along with other membership requirements.

II. Proposed Clarification Modification E - Discontinued Programs

This change proposes to add to the NC-SARA manual the established requirement that the institution agree to either "provide a reasonable alternative" for delivering instruction or "reasonable financial compensation for the education the student did not receive" when it discontinues a program before students are able to complete it. We agree that students harmed by program terminations should be fully compensated for their loss and/or are offered a teach-out in the same or comparable program at a fully compliant institution, and appreciate NC-SARA's attention to ensuring that application requirements are reflected appropriately in the manual. The language as proposed, however, lacks sufficient detail to ensure students would be adequately protected if faced with program discontinuance, and we urge NC-SARA to use this opportunity to clarify the requirements.

First, the term “reasonable alternative for delivering the instruction” should be clarified to require institutions to arrange for a teach-out in the same or comparable program. This tracks the language of federal law applicable to teach-outs for closed schools and is therefore a concept with which both accreditors and institutions are already familiar.<sup>1</sup> Institutions should not be considered in compliance with this provision if they offer “alternatives” that are not the same or comparable to the program in which the student was enrolled.

Second, this provision should be clarified to allow for teach-outs only at institutions that are fully in compliance with federal law, state law, and NC-SARA policy, as well as in good standing with an institutional accreditor and any relevant programmatic accreditors. Students already harmed by the discontinuance of their program should not be at risk of being offered substandard educations by institutions that are not fully in compliance with state and federal laws.

Third, while the current application language and proposed manual revision refer to requirements for institutions to provide an alternative option for completing their program or financial compensation, it does not make clear whether the student or the institution decides which route to pursue. The manual revision should clarify that the choice to pursue financial relief or an alternative program is one for the student to make, not the institution. Students who have already been harmed by a school’s program termination should have the option to evaluate the quality of the teach-out program, the institution offering the teach-out, the cost of the new program (beyond the term already paid for), and other factors important to their significant investment. Students should not be forced to accept a teach-out, but should have the power to decide their future themselves.

Finally, the term “reasonable financial compensation for the education the student did not receive” is unclear. We recommend requiring the school to provide a refund of all amounts paid by the student to the institution. When a program is discontinued, the institution has breached its contract with the student. If a student does not enroll in a teach-out, the institution should therefore refund all amounts it received under the contract so that a harmed student can decide whether to re-enroll in another program or to forego a higher education altogether.

We recommend the following revision to address the above:

Section 3(b)(6)

The institution agrees that, in cases where the institution cannot fully deliver the instruction for which a student has contracted, it will offer the student the option of (1) a teach-out in the same or a comparable program at an institution that is in good standing with its institutional and programmatic accreditors, is unconditionally approved by the student’s home state and NC-SARA, is not on any type of monitoring status or required to provide any letter of credit by the Department of Education, and is not under government investigation for any federal or state law financial aid or consumer protection violations; or (2) a full refund of all amounts paid by or on behalf of the student or the institution.

II. Proposed Clarification Modification F – Mandatory Arbitration

In our previous comment, we raised a concern about mandatory arbitration agreements, which limit students' legal recourse if they believe they were wronged by the school. We appreciate that the NC-SARA staff considered our comments, and has included a proposed clarification citing our comments as the inspiration. Unfortunately, the proposed solution does not address the issues we raised.

Mandatory arbitration clauses are not commonly used in enrollment agreements of public and nonprofit colleges, which compose the vast majority of NC-SARA membership. However, they are widely used by for-profit schools to limit students' recourse if they have been harmed by their school, including some of the largest institutions within NC-SARA.<sup>2</sup> Although the NC-SARA manual states that "mandatory arbitration agreements do not pertain to SARA policy issues," and the proposed clarification would remove the word "issues," neither this change nor the manual limits institutions from enforcing these predatory agreements against students on other issues. As an independent organization - rather than a state compact - NC-SARA could legally prohibit mandatory arbitration clauses outright for member institutions without violating the Federal Arbitration Act, leveraging its unique position to raise consumer protection standards in online education.

Because NC-SARA prohibits states from enforcing state higher education laws aimed at protecting students, and also precludes students' states from investigating and acting on the complaints of their residents or taking action against a school for violating NC-SARA policies, it is especially important that students are protected from predatory mechanisms such as these. Our recommendation is that NC-SARA take steps to ensure that students are able to protect themselves and seek restitution when they are harmed, including by seeking redress in a court of law. By prohibiting arbitration clauses, abusive and low quality predatory schools will be less able to use NC-SARA as a shield to accountability.

We therefore urge the Board to instead prohibit institutions operating within NC-SARA from including mandatory arbitration agreements in their enrollment agreements, rather than simply limiting their applicability to NC-SARA policies. The combination of loosened federal regulation and an economic downturn triggered a boom in for-profit college enrollment after the Great Recession. The current economic crisis is likely to lead to another enrollment boom, and with the for-profit college sector now predominantly online and enrolling students from states outside of the institution's state, the risks to students are now greater. Implementing strengthened NC-SARA policies now could lessen the risks to students should a new enrollment boom occur.

Rather than the adopting the change proposed in the Board meeting materials, addressing our concerns could be accomplished by first adding a prohibition on enforcing mandatory arbitration clauses to NC-SARA application requirements, and second by revising the manual as follows:

Section 4.4(g)

SARA participating institutions are prohibited from enforcing mandatory arbitration clauses in enrollment agreements. Disputes between students and Institutions on SARA-related matters are intended to be resolved by the Institution's State Portal Entity or through other means. A student may, however, bring to the Institution Home State SARA Portal Entity any issue that potentially involves a violation of SARA policies, and participation in SARA in no way limits students' ability to seek legal recourse. Institutions that choose to operate under SARA accept a student's right to bring complaints about violation of SARA policies through the SARA process or under other means.

Other Urgent Recommendations for NC-SARA Given COVID-19 Crisis

As colleges across the country transition to remote learning, the role of NC-SARA is of increasing importance. Reciprocity agreements can be important tools in streamlining oversight and promoting quality educational opportunity, but only so far as the specific terms of the agreement are sufficiently robust. In the case of NC-SARA, its terms represent a net increase in the regulation of distance education in some states, but they also undermine safeguards and consumer protections in others.

We raised several concerns in our previous comment relevant to the unprecedented and uncertain times we find ourselves in, and we would like to raise those issues again for your consideration:

- Deficiencies in State Portal Entity Capacity. NC-SARA's theory of action rests on member states fulfilling all of the agreement's requirements and performing sufficient state oversight so that other states can trust in the quality of each others' institutions. Yet NC-SARA has acknowledged that state Portal Entity capacity varies widely, with some states so severely understaffed and underresourced that they are unable to perform the monitoring and oversight functions required of them under NC-SARA.
- Higher Standards for Stronger Consumer Protection. The establishment of higher standards for NC-SARA membership than those required under other regulatory schemes would set NC-SARA schools apart and help facilitate student access to the highest quality and value in online education.
- Lack of Complaint Transparency. NC-SARA policies require students to exhaust complaint procedures at their institution before they are permitted to raise their complaint to the state level,<sup>3</sup> a process requirement that undoubtedly has a dampening effect on complaint submission given administrative burden as well as concerns about school retaliation.<sup>4</sup> Although we understand that NC-SARA is taking steps to improve the complaint reporting on their website, it is necessary for NC-SARA to develop a complaint process that works well for students, requires collaboration among states, and assists in identifying problematic patterns of institutional behavior.

- Oversight of Branch Campuses. NC-SARA staff has provided assurances that the Portal Entities are in communication with each other regularly, and that they are able to express concerns and collaborate on responses in that way,<sup>5</sup> but in the interests of consumer protection and transparency those communication and collaboration processes should be formalized.
- Attorney General and Consumer Advocate Membership on Board of Directors. We appreciate that following our previous comments, NC-SARA announced that there would be two openings on the Board. We urge the Board to choose a representative of a state attorney general and a consumer advocate to fill those positions, and to make those appointments as soon as possible.

We sincerely appreciate the opportunity to offer these comments, and our organizations would welcome opportunities to discuss these recommendations at your convenience.

STRENGTHENING INTERSTATE OVERSIGHT OF DISTANCE EDUCATION THROUGH IMPROVEMENTS TO NATIONAL COUNCIL FOR STATE AUTHORIZATION RECIPROCITY AGREEMENTS (NC-SARA)

With thousands of colleges now offering distance education, states have sought ways to partner with each other to streamline the approval and oversight of colleges. A “reciprocity agreement” is an agreement between states that they will delegate some amount of oversight authority to the state where the school is located, so that the many states where its students are located do not have to approve and oversee the college. Reciprocity agreements can be important tools in streamlining oversight and promoting educational opportunity, but only so far as the specific terms of the agreement are sufficiently robust.

The National Council for State Authorization Reciprocity Agreements (NC-SARA) is the most prominent example of a state authorization reciprocity agreement. NC-SARA simplifies compliance for institutions by funneling approval and oversight through the state where they are physically located, which in turn reduces the number of out-of-state institutions seeking approval to enroll students that state regulators must oversee. Rather than apply to each state in which they enroll students for authorization, NC-SARA requires institutions to submit an application for membership in the state where it is located. Upon approval, the institution is authorized to offer online educational programs in any other NC-SARA member state, without additional authorization needed from other states participating in the agreement.

However, NC-SARA's one-size-fits-all system oversimplifies the process, making it too easy for institutions to get approved and reducing states' authority over institutions outside their borders. Although many of NC-SARA's policies are good and may represent a net increase in the regulation of distance education in some states, they also undermine critical safeguards and consumer protections in others.

The following changes to NC-SARA's reciprocity agreement are necessary to protect the rights of states, students, and taxpayers.

- 1. Strengthen institutional quality measures, including assessments of colleges' student loan repayment or default rates, completion rates, job placement rates, and raise the required Financial Responsibility score to no lower than 1.5. Reciprocity offers states and institutions an opportunity to reduce their authorization workloads, but a streamlined approval process should only be available to institutions that do not put students or taxpayers at risk. Approval requirements should establish a high bar, so that only rigorous and financially secure institutions are eligible for this expedited approval process.
- 2. Create strong financial security and veracity requirements to require institutions to comply with state refund and cancellation provisions, and require that all states maintain a tuition recovery fund. School closures can be devastating to students, and states must retain the authority to protect students and taxpayers from a precipitous school closure. States must be confident that institutions approved to operate through a reciprocity agreement are financially secure, and students must be protected in the event of a school closure.
- 3. Prohibit institutions from enrolling students in programs that will not qualify for state professional licensing requirements where they reside, absent a handwritten request for exemption. The risk of professional licensing requirements rests almost entirely on students. Current NC-SARA policies require institutions to determine whether a program satisfies state licensure requirements, but allows the institution to enroll the student regardless, requiring only that the student receive some form of notification from the institution.
- 4. Develop a complaint process that works well for students, encourages collaboration among states, and assists in identifying problematic patterns of institutional behavior. Especially in a reciprocity agreement, student complaints serve as an important tool for states to identify problematic patterns at educational institutions. Students must be free to file complaints, states must work collaboratively to investigate and resolve complaints, and complaint data must be collected and transparent at every level. Further, we recommend that NC-SARA prohibit institutions from including mandatory arbitration clauses in their enrollment contracts.
- 5. Empower states with the authority to enforce higher education-specific consumer protections, excluding certain agreed upon approval and disclosure provisions, which will be addressed by the reciprocity agreement. Reciprocity agreements don't need to be all or nothing. NC-SARA can streamline the approval and oversight process for institutions without requiring states to cede authority over out-of-state institutions.
- 6. Allow states to limit enrollment at institutions that display specified problematic patterns, as well as based on state policy. States must be able to make the final determination about whether an institution is permitted to operate within the state, and a reciprocity agreement must ensure that states retain the authority needed to safeguard students and taxpayers.
- 7. Modify the existing governance and decision-making processes to afford states more authority within and regarding the agreement, and encourage more collaboration between the states. Given their key role in the Title IV triad, it is essential that states can create and enforce higher education regulations. For states that join a reciprocity agreement, this process is by definition a collaborative one, but it is imperative that states serve as the key policy and decision makers.
