At the close of World War II, a renegade professor admitted a wave of returning veterans to Harvard Law, even though some had questionable credentials and others didn’t even apply. They’d be called “the best class there ever was.”

The Untold Story of Warren Seavey and His Students

By Joshua Prager